Skilful Designing Makes Small Home Look Large; Air of Intimacy a Feature MANY FAMOUS SUMMER RESORTS One of the difficulties of successfully planning a suburban home is that of giving the building that intimate air of domesticity which Americans expect in all but the most formal dwellings. That the problem is sometimes happily solved, however, may be seen from a study of the accompanying plans and the exterior, which has been so handled that it poswhich has been so named that it pos-esses the quaintness which one feels should belong to a home in the country, having all the essential features neces-sery without sacrificing utility. E. G. W. Dietrich of this city is the architect. house shown illustrates a careful study in plan and exterior. It has been called "a big little house." The effect was brought about by the unique treatment of the large porch, so planned as to be under the main roof of the house, and within the wall lines of the bouse, and within the wall lines of the building proper, thereby securing the appearance of completeness.

A catching quality of houses costing somewhat more than this is the picturesque roof broken up by domes, gables and towers. But as these are expensive, the architect has been forced to fall back on what is, after all, more beautiful—the large simple roof domibeautiful—the large simple roof domitaking the whole structure in the man-ter beloved by our forefathers. This done he was at liberty to give gener-ous proportions to rooms, to indulge in some delicacy of lines and richness of

The windows are placed so as to be attractive to the exterior, and to afford plenty of sunlight and ventilation. The large porch is a most inviting resting place. Entrance to the house is through a wide hall and to the right is a large rosy nock, with a generous fireplace. The large living room with its generous preportioned fireplace and beamed ceil ng adds cheer. In the rear of the hall

The kitchen, while convenient, is at the same time so arranged that the cooking fumes cannot permeate into any other part of the house.

A novel convenience is the trunk lift at the side and celiar entrance, where frunks, &c., can be unloaded and sent to the cellar and upper floors, thereby saving the sidewalls of the stairways being damaged, and in unpleasant her washed clothes may be sent the drying room on the third floor.

LOCATION HIGH

Don't you realize that at the door of New York lies the most beautiful, picturesque, healthy section along the Atlantic—on the Pallsades? Probably you do, but do not know what a magnificent opportunity exists NOW to pick up big bargains in lots. The high rents in New York and New Jersey south of Grantwood, are forcing the people this way, where we still have room, and the biggest boom ever known around New York is NOW ON THE WAY HERE. Everybody believes it, and that fact alone will make it, for people follow their judgment with their money.
